

A TALE OF Two Men, Two Cities, & One South Seas Healing Treasure

Two very different men discover they have something in common: the amazing pain-relieving benefits of noni fruit leather.

“I was diagnosed with degenerative arthritis of my spine,” said Rob McDaniel of Auburn, California.

McDaniel worked at McClellan Air Force Base, which operated as a way station for planes, parts, and supplies from 1935 to 2001 seven miles outside Sacramento, sorting and recycling military metal. He did a lot of lifting and operated forklifts and other heavy machinery.

The physically demanding work took its toll, and McDaniel retired with job-related spine pain—so much so that even ordinary things he used to do around his home, like watering the garden and performing typical maintenance repairs, were painful. The painkillers his doctor prescribed had side effects, but he wasn't really big on alternative medicine for exploring other pain-relieving solutions. However, he did want to go to Hawaii upon retirement where he happened to find his pearl of pain relief.

He wasn't expecting to find his answer on the Garden Island of Kauai on a bus tour, but it just so happened that one of the increasingly popular stops on Kauai is the bustling Hawaiian Health Ohana certified organic noni farm. There, they make two amazing uses of noni, as a potent antioxidant and pain-relieving fruit leather, and in a lotion that a lot of people like Rob McDaniel say is better than any other pain reliever they've ever used.

“People love stopping over and we've become a big hit on the tourism circuit,” says Steve Frailey, Hawaii's most articulate and well-informed noni ambassador. Of course, throughout the South Seas, the whole fruit of the noni is traditionally used, and only Hawaiian Health Ohana produces the whole non-fermented fruit in a very delicious and raw leather, which preserves the antioxidant and phytochemical richness of the whole fruit. This is actually what medical doctors from the University of Hawaii say offers pain-relieving benefits (most juices are fermented or blended and have reduced activity and potency).

“People who stop always have aches and pains, so I share our lotions and fruit leather with them—the results are so fast, people are amazed,” says Steve enthusiastically.

Rich in scopoletin, a rare pain-killing phytochemical, noni fruit leather also supports immune health and demonstrably improves the well-being of cancer patients. Indeed, the pain-relieving benefits of this unique fruit leather are thought to be the most potent of all types of noni since it includes all of the traditionally consumed portions of the fruit known to be richest in scopoletin.

Now home from Hawaii, McDaniel won't go a day without eating a two-by-two-inch square of the noni leather, which provides him with immediate pain relief.

McDaniel says that, “Without noni, most days, I wouldn't be able to get out of bed. Plus, there are no side effects. In my book, it's a superfood. The pain is to the point where I can control it and I am good to go. I do a lot of computer stuff. I take care of my yard. I am able to do all of the things I want to do without the pain. The noni seems to allow me to get up and move around.

“I would recommend it to people, and I have recommended it to my friends. My wife works as a cook in the school district and is on her feet constantly. She was skeptical, but she began using the noni lotion and told me it really helped relieve pain.”

ANOTHER NONI MIRACLE

Ed Marcus had no idea noni was about to come into his life, either. Marcus is a remarkable man. He is from Cleveland, Ohio. He went to Howard University and majored in psychology until his senior year when war came to America. He served in the Marines in Korea from 1949 to 1953 and later in the Peace Corps and Job Corps in destinations such as Zimbabwe, Kenya, Gambia, Uganda and Tanzania. A great American who is now 78, Marcus was experiencing decreased appetite, low energy, frequent nighttime trips to the bathroom, and after-effects of a stroke. His cousin Joyce, who was in the health field, had learned about noni fruit leather herself from an earlier article in The Doctors' Pre- scription for Healthy Living, and she called up Marcus and told him he should try some. So Marcus called the folks in Hawaii and ordered it. Noni changed his life.

"I was almost a couch potato. Now I get up and take walks that I hadn't been doing before. I have noticed my appetite has changed, and my taste for food has returned. I was urinating 25 to 30 times a night; my PSA was so high. Now I get up maybe three or four times a night. That's pretty amazing. I am so grateful to my cousin Joyce. If not for her I would never have known about noni."

THE SCOPOLETIN SECRET

Neither of these great American men knows the other. But what they had in common was that the typical prescription medications doctors so often prescribe were not able to safely deliver them pain relief and health. Scopoletin has an impressive array of studies that support its use for pain relief. Scopoletin plays "an important role" for reducing pain sensation say researchers in the July 2008 issue of Basic Clinical Pharmacology and Toxicology. Noni fruit leather is one of the richest sources of scopoletin but doesn't have any drug side effects. In fact it is actually a food, a superfood. "It's funny, instead of taking a pill a day, I take a square of noni a day and it's just amazing," says McDaniel. "I believe in this stuff."

THE DOCTORS' PRESCRIPTION

If you're in pain, the benefits of noni are almost immediate.

Besides being eaten, the versatile fruit leather can be moistened and applied directly to the skin, with the same benefits of lotion. But most people prefer to have both the fruit leather and lotion.

After all, when consumed, noni has additional benefits such as immune support, maintaining healthy blood sugar and blood pressure, and, of course, relieving pain. But the lotion provides extremely quick relief, too. Two men, two different lives. One common denominator: the pain relieving benefits of daily noni. ■

From the magic island of Kauai comes this potent curative aid, made from the organic fruit of the Noni tree.

Many uses for Noni have been known to Polynesian cultures for thousands of years, and it was a principal medicine for their far-voyaging Canoe people, spreading Noni throughout the Pacific.

Only recently encountered by the rest of the world, Noni has already been traditionally employed for many internal and external uses.

In order to preserve the healing qualities, we have created NONI FRUIT LEATHER and LAVENDER NONI LOTION, made from the pulp of organically grown fruit and processed at very low temperatures.

NONI FRUIT LEATHER is 100%, nothing but raw organic non-fermented dried Noni. Our LAVENDER NONI LOTION is composed of 99.2% NONI FRUIT LEATHER in a form prepared for the external uses of Noni.

NONI FRUIT LEATHER and LAVENDER NONI LOTION make ideal first-aid kits for home, car, purse, pocket or pack, and need no refrigeration.
